

REFLECTED SIGNALS

Abstract:

We present a new stochastic theory for delay-Doppler mapping of the ocean surface for bistatic scattering. This stochastic theory should complement nicely the previous theories for the Global Positioning System (GPS) reflected signals from ocean surfaces, especially that of Zavorotny and Voronovich (2000). We quantify the Doppler spread of the reflected signal before interpreting the delay.